

Hon. Deputy Minister of Public Administration and Home Affairs

In order to ensure productive and satisfactory public service to general public, the duties and the role of public servants should be at the optimum level. Further, the general public today expect to get their needs satisfied by service providers who can identify their requirements under the globalization. Therefore, the public servants should be satisfied by changing them as new persons with positive attitudes and providing wide knowledge in the field of modern technology.

The community always expects productive and efficient public service. However establishment of such service should be ensured by way of providing physical resources at the maximum level and also making opportunity to improve mental satisfaction of public servants. Therefore, my belief is that the service rendered by this Ministry to satisfy the expectation of the public in year 2006, should be highly appreciated at this occasion.

The direction and guidance made by Hon. Minister of Public Administration and Home Affairs in making targets in year 2006 a reality should be highlighted. Further, I express my gratitude to the Secretary of Ministry of Public Administration and Home Affairs and staff for their dedication shown by their duty in year 2006.

T.B.Ekanayake (Member of Parliament)

Deputy Minister of Public Administration and Home Affairs